SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

BELLAREVELATION v. ROLEPLAYERSIXRP6, ET AL.

ON MOTION FOR RECUSAL AND MOTION FOR VACATUR OF CONTEMPT ORDERS

No. 26–8. Decided May 31, 2026

The motion for recusal is denied. The motion for vacatur of contempt orders is denied. JUSTICE FEELINGS took no part in the consideration or decision of these motions.*

CHIEF JUSTICE INSLEE, concurring.

In this ongoing litigation, BellaRevelation asks this Court to do two things: First, she asks this Court to order the recusal of a Justice sitting by designation in the lower court. This is supported by all parties. And second, she asks this Court to vacate the contempt orders issued against her. All these requests, as is before us right now, are in the form of motions. Motions in this Court are usually centered around procedural requests rather than substantive. So, compared with such, the motions before us are extraordinary. The relief requested read much like what one would find in a petition for certiorari or application for stay.

The actual relief being requested is extraordinary too. The motions are asking this Court to unleash a wrecking ball of interventions based on shaky and sketchy grounds. For example, to substantiate this Court forcing a riding Justice to recuse, BellaRevelation invokes a “supervisory authority” under the Supreme Court Judicial Assistance Act. In only a couple of sentences does BellaRevelation declare this supposed authority. She then goes on to explain some of the Act’s provisions. That’s it. No textual citation, no analysis, nothing. Without so much as a direct quote from the text, it’s hard to see what is being referred to. At least for me, I am not prepared to read between the lines of the Act to generate a supposed supervisory authority based only on scant briefing (which gives no analysis of such authority) and with no direct references from the text. Where is this statutory basis of the Court’s supervisory authority under the Supreme Court Judicial Assistance Act? BellaRevelation does not identify nor explain it.

I am sympathetic with BellaRevelation’s cause. She raises important questions and compelling arguments. But the form of relief and its requests veer off greatly from the road of ordinary judicial procedure. BellaRevelation can bring a petition for certiorari or jurisdictional statement so we could consider her recusal arguments and contempt orders. If emergency relief is sought after, there are vehicles for that as well. Twice now, this Court has declined to grant extraordinary relief through extraordinary means and extraordinary forms. See Odure v. Federal Election Commission, 1 U. S. ____ (2026) (per curiam); dannybec v. iCoyxte, 1 U. S. ____ (2026) (cert. denied). And we have expressed our concern with those who seek to short circuit the ordinary judicial process.

The motions and the relief requested depart sharply from regular adjudicatory processes, so I concur with the Court in denying the motions.
